Color and form are the best attributes for this New Zealand sedge. As a young plant the bronze-red fine-textured leaves are very attractive and as it matures the upright leaves start to arch over to the ground. Carex flagellifera is both hardy and can be grown in full sun. When grown in shade, the leaves appear more a reddish-green color. Evergreen in milder climates, hardy to at least Zone 4, this sedge will quietly enhance any suitable landscape for many years with minimal care. Place a number of plants close together for a really unique effect.
